Kristy is a successful businesswoman who co-owns a design company. She has experience in governance previously being a Director of a learning board trust overseeing eight schools. Kristy was part of a team that delivered a Modern Slavery Garden at Chelsea Flower Show in 2016, to their delight they won a gold medal. Kristy said 'The idea was to raise awareness of the crime and help victims. Theresa May visited the garden, I was impressed as it was a difficult time and yet she kept her promise to support us, and later announced a £35 million fund to fight modern slavery at source. The PM is serious about fighting this horrendous crime and I am too. We reached over 5 million people on twitter and 3 million on TV with the message that modern slavery is in our streets behind closed doors and we can get victims help, thanks to the BBC, RHS and Piers Morgan.
